

So what's the fuss about SPP?

"Security and Prosperity Partnership of North America" sounds OK, doesn't it . . . but it means that Canada as a nation is integrating more and more closely with the United States. Look carefully at that.

Remember the story about pesticide levels in our foods being "harmonized" with US regulations? This means higher levels of pesticide residue in 40% of our fruits and vegetables. Is this better for Canada? Some 300 regulatory regimes are currently under review. . . without parliamentary or public debate.

Our water, our health services, our energy resources and our military are already under discussion ... what will be left?

Learn more at: www.commonfrontiers.ca
www.integratethis.ca

So what's the fuss about SPP?

"Security and Prosperity Partnership of North America" sounds OK, doesn't it . . . but it means that Canada as a nation is integrating more and more closely with the United States. Look carefully at that.

Remember the story about pesticide levels in our foods being "harmonized" with US regulations? This means higher levels of pesticide residue in 40% of our fruits and vegetables. Is this better for Canada? Some 300 regulatory regimes are currently under review. . . without parliamentary or public debate.

Our water, our health services, our energy resources and our military are already under discussion ... what will be left?

Learn more at: www.commonfrontiers.ca
www.integratethis.ca

So what's the fuss about SPP?

"Security and Prosperity Partnership of North America" sounds OK, doesn't it . . . but it means that Canada as a nation is integrating more and more closely with the United States. Look carefully at that.

Remember the story about pesticide levels in our foods being "harmonized" with US regulations? This means higher levels of pesticide residue in 40% of our fruits and vegetables. Is this better for Canada? Some 300 regulatory regimes are currently under review. . . without parliamentary or public debate.

Our water, our health services, our energy resources and our military are already under discussion ... what will be left?

Learn more at: www.commonfrontiers.ca
www.integratethis.ca

So what's the fuss about SPP?

"Security and Prosperity Partnership of North America" sounds OK, doesn't it . . . but it means that Canada as a nation is integrating more and more closely with the United States. Look carefully at that.

Remember the story about pesticide levels in our foods being "harmonized" with US regulations? This means higher levels of pesticide residue in 40% of our fruits and vegetables. Is this better for Canada? Some 300 regulatory regimes are currently under review. . . without parliamentary or public debate.

Our water, our health services, our energy resources and our military are already under discussion ... what will be left?

Learn more at: www.commonfrontiers.ca
www.integratethis.ca

